Dear Randy and Katie,

Please find attached an informational item from the Department of Sociology to share at an upcoming CAA meeting.

Professor Jennifer Ottesen, Chair of ASCC, shared the proposed changes as an informational item at the most recent ASC Curriculum Committee meeting on Friday, November 3. I am including Professor Williams on this email in case CAA should have any questions for her.

Best regards,
Bernadette

October 23, 2023

Dear Members of the Arts and Sciences Curriculum Committee,

SOCIOL 1101 Introduction to Sociology is an introductory course that serves as a pre-requisite for several of our undergraduate degree programs. We recently created a new course SOCIOL 1102 Social Foundations of Race, Ethnicity, Gender, and Social Class, which covers the same substantive topics as 1101 but with a more explicit focus on race, ethnic, gender and social class diversity.

I am writing to request that students be allowed to use either SOCIOL 1101 or SOCIOL 1102 to fulfill the pre-requisites in the following degree plans, as described below.

1. Criminology and Criminal Justice Studies – BA
2. Sociology – BA
3. Sociology – BS

We also have one related change to the Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Certificate. Currently SOCIOL 1101 or 1101H is an option for fulfilling the elective requirement in Group 1: Social Class/Economic Inequality. We would like to revise this to read: SOCIOL 1101, 1101H, or 1102.

These changes are shown in red on the attached advising sheets. Please let me know if you have questions or need any additional information.

Sincerely,

Kristi Williams, PhD

Professor and Chair

Sociology

for students starting at Ohio State AU22 and after (and following the New GE)

In general, Sociology is a liberal arts/social science major that provides students with the scientific tools and social perspective necessary to better understand social issues and complex societal problems.

Sociology is the study of group life. Sociologists investigate the structure of groups, organizations and societies. The goal is to understand the characteristics, causes and consequences of human behavior and social relationships in various kinds of group settings. Because human behavior is diverse, the field of Sociology covers a wide range of subjects. Sociologists may specialize in the following areas:

family	education
urban community	health & medicine
social movements	deviance
crime and law	religion
work and occupations	sports and leisure
gender and sex roles	politics
racial & ethnic minorities

Graduate, Professional & Law School

Sociology is also a valuable major for students planning to attend graduate or professional school. Sociology provides a rich foundation of knowledge regarding a variety of fields. Undergraduate Sociology majors frequently go on to post-baccalaureate programs in law, business, administration, social work, public health, urban planning, public policy management and other various social science fields.

Careers

There are few jobs that have the title "Sociologist" for those who hold Bachelors degrees. However, Sociology is a relevant discipline that helps to prepare students for a variety of careers and for graduate or professional education. Major sectors of employment for graduates of our program include:

Community/Non-profit (fundraising, social service organizations, or child welfare agencies)

Health and social services (family planning, substance abuse, rehabilitation counseling, group work with youth or the elderly, recreation, or administration)

Criminal justice and corrections (law enforcement, probation, parole)

Business community (advertising, marketing, consumer research, insurance, real estate, and personnel work or training)

Federal, state, or local government (transportation, housing, agriculture and labor)

Sociology majors compete with other liberal arts graduates for these types of positions. However, a strong program of study and careful selection of courses coupled with practical experience will produce a competitive advantage in the marketplace.

Sociology: Understanding The World Around You!

Declaration of Major:

Pre-requisite to declaring the major: SOCIOL 1101 or SOCIOL 1102
To officially declare Sociology as your major, you must meet with an advisor in the Sociology Department

Structure of the Major: *13 Courses / 39 Credit hoursRequired Courses:

SOC 2463 or H2463	Social Stratification: Race, Class & Gender
SOC 3488	Introduction to Sociological Theory
SOC 3487 or H3487	Research Methods in Sociology *
SOC 3549	Statistics in Sociology *

The required courses provide the building blocks for the Sociology discipline. In these courses you will:

- understand and practice research methods (3487),
- analyze statistical data (3549),
- be exposed to the issues of social inequality (2463), and
- apply sociological theory to contemporary society (3488).

Experiential Learning Requirement:

Enrollment in some of these options requires permission of the department. Meet with an advisor to plan this portion of your major. Complete a minimum of 3 credit hours from the following:

SOC 2211S: Corrections: An Ohio Prison Education Exchange Program Course
 SOC 3191: Internship Program in Sociology and Criminology (3 hrs minimum; Graded S/U)
 SOC 3798.03: Genocide and Its Aftermath in Rwanda (3 hrs; summer term education abroad)
 SOC 4000S: Social Science Business Collaborative: A Service-Learning Approach
 SOC 4462: Advanced Social Stratification (4 hrs)

 SOC 4998: Undergraduate Research in Sociology (3 hrs minimum; Graded S/U)
 SOC H4999.02/4999.02: Senior Honors/Non-Honors Thesis (4 hrs minimum; Graded S/U)

 Embedded Literacies:

There is an expectation that students will have experiences throughout their education in the major that develop their competencies in three key areas—data analysis, advanced writing, and technology.

Data Analysis: fulfilled with SOC 3549 Statistics in Sociology
 Advanced Writing: fulfilled with SOC 3487 Research Methods in Sociology
 Technology: fulfilled with SOC 3302 Technology and Global Society (can be selected as an elective course in the major)

Elective Courses:

The eight remaining courses must be chosen from the list of Sociology courses below. At least four of the eight must be chosen from the 4000-5000 level.

Course choices should be made in consultation with a departmental academic advisor.

Courses that are listed for the major program cannot also be used to meet General Education Foundation requirements.

Criminology & Criminal Justice Studies

for students starting at Ohio State AU22 and after (and following the New GE)

Criminology & Criminal Justice Studies are the sociology-based study of crime and the criminal justice system.

Our major exposes students to the social dimensions of the crime problem, explanations of the prevalence of various types of crime, and the various agencies and programs designed to prevent and control crime and delinquency. The latter include the police, courts, probation and parole systems, and correctional institutions. Attention is also given to such issues as women and crime, youth and crime, and the place of control agencies in larger societal context. As a social science/liberal arts field, criminology provides majors with a variety of techniques for examining and responding to important questions about the causes and consequences of crime and the workings of the criminal justice system.

Graduate, Professional & Law School

As part of a liberal arts/social science degree, the criminology major provides an excellent background for post-baccalaureate studies. Our alums pursue graduate work in criminology or in related fields such as sociology, anthropology, political science, and psychology. In addition, the major provides a foundation for post-baccalaureate work in law, public policy, social work, business, and urban planning.

Careers

Our students are prepared for a variety of career options. Some graduates enter directly into the labor force in these fields:

- law enforcement
- delinquency prevention
- delinquency control services
- crime prevention
- corrections
- probation or parole
- criminal justice administration
- research
- fraud investigation
- loss prevention & asset protection

Undergraduate criminology majors are also employed in non-crime related sectors such as:

- health and social services (substance abuse and rehabilitation counseling)
- community work (child and social welfare agencies)
- federal, state, or local government (urban planning & housing)

Declaration of Major:

Pre-requisite to declaring the major: SOCIOL 1101 or SOCIOL 1102

Criminology vs. Criminal Justice:

While there are a variety of disciplines which study crime, criminals, and criminal justice, three are especially visible and important. They are sociology, criminology, and criminal justice. While these three disciplines share a common substantive focus and at the undergraduate level could lead to similar career paths, they also differ in important ways. These differences are clearest on the graduate level but readily apparent on the undergraduate level as well.

Sociology treats crime, criminals, and criminal justice as one of many behavioral and institutional scholarly arenas of interest to sociologists. Along with education, health care, work and occupations, race and gender, to name a few, sociologists study crime, criminals, and criminal justice as one way of better understanding the institutions humans create and the recurrent patterns of behavior they nourish and sustain. Crime, criminals, and criminal justice are no more, or less, important than these other areas of sociological research and teaching and sociologists do not regularly consider the policy or administrative implications of their research.

Criminology treats crime, criminals, and criminal justice as central substantive concerns. Except as other scholarly areas illuminate crime, criminals, and criminal justice such as educational levels or linkages with the world of work, criminologists do not regularly teach or do research in areas other than crime, criminals, and criminal justice. In addition, criminologists also pay more attention to policy and administrative issues than do sociologists. On average, however, criminologists share an abiding interest with sociologists in understanding rather than direct action.

Criminal justice is the newest of the three disciplines and clearly the most focused. It evidences singular interests in crime, criminals, and criminal justice and it is rare indeed when professors and scholars trained in criminal justice teach or do research in other disciplines than crime, criminals, and criminal justice. Moreover, criminal justice scholars are far more likely to consider the policy and administrative implications of their teaching and research and far more likely to offer both undergraduate and graduate training to their students in policy and administration.

The Department of Sociology at The Ohio State University offers undergraduate majors in Sociology and in Criminology and Criminal Justice Studies. The latter training is very clearly sociological because the courses are professed by scholars trained in sociology. As such, the focus is understanding crime, criminals, and criminal justice and, except in passing, little attention is given to policy or administrative implications.
